

Specialist debt litigation law firm Drydens has moved offices to Shire House, a purpose-built, award winning building in Bradford. The firm, which employs 130 staff, has grown by almost 150% in the four years since de-merger from corporate law firm Hammonds.

The move will cater for the company's continued growth whilst providing the business with a sound economical cost base from which it operates on a national basis. Drydens, which has a strong consumer finance practice is recommended by legal directories Chambers & Partners and Legal 500 for its work in debt litigation and the firm represents several lenders in both mortgage arrears and unsecured recoveries collections.

Rachael Charmbury, chief executive of Drydens said, "Our move marks the next phase in our development. I am delighted that I have been able to move our people to such a modern, technology-friendly building in a central location which benefits from excellent commuter links."

*"Our move
marks the next phase in our development."*

not just another law firm